

As part of our XM service, I feel that having instant traffic and weather is a big part of what XM is all about - providing what we want, when we want it. Most people despise too many commercials and not enough music on public radio, so XM steps in and for a nominal fee solves the problem. More than likely there are countless people in America in various occupations that rely on this feature from their XM service - as an example, I have heard of truck drivers using this as an advantage to avoid delays and heavy traffic. That in turn is economical for business which more than pays for the XM subscription price. See to it that this right is not taken away, but rather continues to grow and become better with time.
